It is the same on the Potomac, but not all quiet.

Some two or three years ago, an association of Presbyterians got up a summer resort near Cape May, at a cost of $500,000. This spring the whole property was sold for $120,000. It would not pay, as pleasure-seekers went to other places. It takes the world's people to make a watering place boom.

As things appear now in Washington, there are no "striking" indications that the Republicans will back down. To give up the contest at this time, or at any other time, till right is maintained, will be a surrender of the majority to the minority. The Republican party has never yet been guilty of surrendering in that way, and so the fight in the Senate goes on.

While the floods at Rockford were clamoring for victory, there was another contest going on—that of the ballots. The issue was between license and anti-license, and for the latter many ladies of the city went to the polls and worked hard all day for the temperance candidate, but the battle was against them, and despite their zeal, courage, and heroic efforts, the license ticket was elected.

They will have a pompous wedding in Vienna on the 10th of May. Princess Stephanie will be married on that day. On the day previous she will enter the city in an imposing chariot drawn by eight horses, and the pompous will give her a hearty welcome by a grand display of decorations and clamorous cheers. She will have a dowry of $150,000, and beside that Rudolph, to whom she will be married, is in possession of a magnificent fortune.

It was a poor end that Major James Nelson came to when he died in Albany penitentiary. He was a paymaster in the United States army and held a good position for life. But he began to live fast, his salary would not keep him straight with the world, and to live faster and keep up his expenses, he resorted to embezzlement, and became short in his account $15,000. He was arrested, tried by a court-martial, and sentenced to imprisonment in the Albany penitentiary. Major Nelson had a great many advantages which he might have used to much profit. He thought of these things while lying in his cell in the Albany prison and broke down completely, and death came to end his agony of mind.

Another strange character has passed away. General Joe Lane—whose death occurred at Roseburg, Oregon, on Tuesday night. He was born in 1801, and like Lincoln and Shields, fought with poverty during a greater part of his early life. He was in the Mexican war, was wounded at Buena Vista, was made a brigadier general, and took a conspicuous part in all the principal battles of that war. He was Governor of Oregon Territory in 1853, a delegate to Congress in 1851-3, and a United States Senator from Indiana in 1873-61. He was candidate for Vice President on the ticket with Breckinridge in the famous campaign of 1876. He went to Oregon again years ago, lived in poverty and died at the age of 80 years.

THE UNCONTROLLED FLOODS.

It was thought that when the great body of snow which fell during the latter part of the winter had gradually and quietly disappeared without rain that there would not be an uncommon rise in the rivers. There were apparently indications that the public to believe that the country would escape disastrous floods, and in this part of the State the melting of the snow has done little or nothing to increase the volume of water in the rivers. But in the central and northern part of the State the thawing of the snow has not been so gradual, and the rivers have been swollen to an almost unprecedented height. In Rock River at this point the rise is ten inches above the high water mark of 1870. The oldest inhabitant in Janesville can not bring to mind a year when the water was higher than it is at the present.

So far, the damage at Janesville has been little or nothing. Above, however, several bridges have been taken away, and the overflowing of the banks has already done serious damage to property. At Beloit, Rockton, Rockford, and other places below, not so fortunately located as Janesville, the damage amounts to many thousands of dollars, beside the loss of life. At Elgin, on the Fox, the damage is already reported to be from $150,000 to $200,000, and in Kane county the loss will not fall far short of $350,000, and all this destruction has been worked in one day.

Probably the greatest damage in the West is on the Missouri river. Farm houses have been washed away, the lands inundated, cattle and horses taken down with the floods, and several lives have been lost. The suffering growing out of this state of affairs has been and still is beyond computation. It has become so great and wide-spread, that relief has been called for, and in nearly all parts of the country aid is being solicited for the victims of the floods in Dakota.

What will be the result in Wisconsin can not be told at this writing. The streams are rising rapidly in many sections of the State, and the mill property can hardly escape damage. Already the signs give evidence that the worst is to come, and what the extent of the loss will be no one is gifted enough to foretell.

AN ATTEMPTED JUSTIFICATION OF THE APPOINTMENT.

Mr. D. H. Paleifer, of Shawana, formerly a member of the Assembly, has written a letter to the Milwaukee Republican, in which he attempted to justify the appointment of 1881 by showing that, in his opinion, it was not any worse than the appointment of 1871 and 1876. Because past appointments have been irregular, he argues that the Legislature of 1881 had a right to make one that was exceedingly bad. He gives examples to prove his position. In 1871, the basis for a Senator was 31,959, and he shows that Senate districts ranged from 14,000 to 45,000. In 1876, when the basis for a Senator was 37,476, six of the districts ranged from 28,811 to 43,958.

No one will doubt that the appointments of 1871 and 1876 were more or less irregular, probably unnecessarily so, but because this was the case, it does not argue that the Legislature of 1881 had a right to make an appointment containing greater irregularities than were ever before known in an appointment in this State. In no previous appointment can it be found where one Senate district was made to contain 18,000, and another 61,000, and no excuse can be made which will justify this kind of work. In neither of the appointments referred to by Mr. Paleifer, can he show a instance in which a district containing a population of 14,000 was allowed two Assemblymen, and another district having 18,000 was allowed but one Assemblyman.

We have no desire to continue a discussion of this appointment question. The bill is dead and buried, and there let it remain. But the attempt of Mr. Paleifer to excuse the work of last year, should not go unnoticed. No newspaper, or no public man, should be willing to give support to any appointment scheme which is not just. No editor or no man outside of an editorial sanctum, can afford to give countenance to any appointment which does not bear the stamp of impartiality and honesty. If the appointments of 1871 and 1876 were in any wise at fault, it is no ground that the appointment of 1881 should be made decidedly bad. The State can and should be apportioned properly into Senate and Assembly districts, and the ends of justice and a fair count will not be answered until the State is so apportioned.

POST-OFFICE SAVINGS BANKS.

Men in Congress and out of it have been talking for several years about establishing postal savings banks in this country, and up to this time no practical steps have been taken in that direction. As is usually the case in all such important and national questions, it has been all talk and no work. Bills seeking to establish a postal savings system in the United States have been drawn, and one of them at least, has been introduced in Congress, but it suffered the fate of many other important measures—having been kicked about until it was lost to the sight of Congressmen, and its whereabouts to-day can hardly be told. There are very substantial reasons why an excellent system of post-office savings banks would succeed in this country. There is a field here for just such savings banks, and the necessity for them is still growing.

Great Britain is far ahead of the United States in this regard. As old fogey and sleepy we think that country is in many particulars, there are many lessons which America can yet learn of England. The post-office savings banks were established in Great Britain in 1831, and in less than ten years from that time, the number of depositors had reached 1,183,000, and the deposits over 75 million dollars. The Postmaster General designated the post-offices that should be savings banks, and no one could deposit less than one shilling at a time, and not more than £30 or $150.00 a year. The deposits of one person's were not to aggregate more than £200 with interest in any one bank, and the interest allowed was 2½ per cent. Up to 1880, the deposits in these post-office savings banks had reached nearly 200 million dollars, and still the business is growing immensely much to the satisfaction of the government and benefit to the working people.

It seems to be a hobby of Mr. Fawcett, the Postmaster-General of the Kingdom, to encourage the laboring men and women to save as much of their earnings as possible, and recently he put into operation a favorite scheme to encourage petty savings among the poorest of the poor, by the sale of postal orders or cards with twelve blank spaces, into each of which is to be gummed a penny stamp, redeemable when filled, at any postoffice.

This seemed at first like a childish way to encourage saving among the poor people, and there was a good deal of quiet ridicule throughout England at Mr. Fawcett's expense for suggesting such a scheme. It was thought the English working people would treat the subject with contempt, by paying no heed to the plan.

But time makes all things even, generally speaking, and this simple system of petty saving proved to be no exception to the rule. Mr. Fawcett, the Postmaster General, has the laugh on his side, decidedly, as is shown by the last report made on the condition of the system. During the past year savings by this simple method reached over a half a million dollars, and the savings are on the increase. Thus the wretchedly poor, in thousands of cases those who have been made poor by their gin, have been attracted from the ale and gun houses to this simple scheme to save pennies, and great has been the good that has been accomplished. In this one net alone Mr. Fawcett has done humanity a grand service, and has showed himself to be a true statesman. It would be a good thing if some American would follow his wise example.

THE MADDENED WATERS.

Reports from Various Parts of the Country—The Water the Highest Ever Known.

WATERTOWN, April 20.—The water in Rock river is doing its worst. Main street bridge was swept away early this morning, and with it a large frame building built up in the river alongside the bridge. One or two other bridges are more or less ruined. Great damage was done in the country by the flood taking down a fences, trees and everything within its reach. The water has risen from seven to eight feet in three days, and is still rising.

MOBILE, Ill., April 20.—Rock river is overflowing everything down this way. At Carbon Cliff, nine miles east of this place, the track of the Chicago, Rock Island & Pacific railroad is undermined between two and three thousand feet wide, stopping all trains. The trains now go by the way of Peoria. At Milan, near the mouth of the river, it is two feet higher than ever was known before. It is reported this evening that one of the highway bridges has gone out and that the railroad bridge will not be safe much longer.

FORT ATKINSON, April 21.—The river has raised four inches to-day, and it is now thought to be at about a stand-still. The bridges have not got out in the city, but are so injured as to make them unsafe for the passage of teams. The low or flat lands are entirely submerged, and a part of the country is navigable with the boats in any direction. The Northwest railroad comes to the river on each side, and the river carries baggage and passengers, and return each from whence he came. They have commenced repairing their bridges. One George Martin was thrown from his boat into the river, above the city bridge, while getting flood-wood, and went under the bridge, coming out below, and was carried by the swift current rapidly towards the river. He labored hard, and finally succeeded in getting hold of a pile, and climbed to the top of the bridge unharmed. The Blackhawk club-house, near Lake Koshkonong, is submerged, and the hunters are compelled to leave or turn ducks themselves and live in the water.

OMAHA.

OMAHA, Neb., April 20.—The Missouri river is again booming, caused by the melting snow swelling its numerous tributaries above. The present rise was the highest ever known in the written history of the river, which at this point marks twenty feet six inches above low water mark. That being within eleven inches of the extreme height reached a few days ago, with water still rising. The situation on the bottom land between the Iowa bluffs on the east side of the river, on the west side of the river is much the same now as then. Work at the Union Pacific shops, smelting works, and the Willow Springs Distillery, on the Omaha side of the river, is entirely suspended again. On the wide stretch of bottom land between the east bank of the river and the Iowa bluffs many people had built houses, which never before this year have been reached by high water, and who were now compelled a second time this season to abandon their homes and seek refuge in Council Bluffs. The water in that city is within two blocks of where it was a few days ago. Railroad tracks on both sides of the river on low land are being washed out. All the roads are having more or less trouble. The Omaha lumber yards are all afloat, and the owners are kept busy night and day saving as much of their property as they can. All the railroad rolling stock on this side of the river has been removed to high ground.

ROCKFORD, April 20.—Since Tuesday there is little change to report in the flood. The maddening waters still sweep by with the speed of some six miles an hour, bearing upon its bosom such loose matter as it has picked up in its long descent from their constant source in Wisconsin. Reports are very busy exaggerating the real facts, frightening those who listen as well as those who publish them. The breaking of the dam at Beloit, this morning, carrying away six men who were laboring to prevent the catastrophe, is a sad affair. But we apprehend the increased volume of water will hardly increase the altitude in this city, for long before it reaches here it will have diffused itself so widely as hardly be noticed. While we were still confident as yesterday that the flood had reached its highest point, yet it is possible that it may be increased by local causes, like the breaking of the dam at Beloit.

On the receipt of a telegram in this city from Beloit to the effect that the dam had given away, Fire Marshal Larkin was notified and detached a detachment of men from the department to watch the city bridge for the men, thinking possibly that the might float down they saw nothing, the little steamer Blanch, was started up the river to look for the men, but probably by this time they have succeeded in gaining the shore. If they have not reached land yet they have undoubtedly drowned, otherwise they would have reached this city before this.

THE WINDY SENATE.

Reminded Talk, Things Made Merry, But Nothing Else Done.

WASHINGTON, April 20.—The Democrats of the Senate were very disagreeably surprised by an attack from Senator Frye, of Maine. Although the youngest member of the body, he made the best and most effective speech that has been heard this session. It was a scathing indictment of every State in the South, without exception, and was so clear and logical and so well backed up with official reports and figures, that it will be difficult, if not impossible, for the Bourbons to make a respectable defence. Mr. Butler, of South Carolina, said the Senator from Maine had dodged the real question which was whether there had been a disgraceful bargain between the Republicans and Mahone. This aroused General Burdette, who caused a good deal of laughter by the earnestness with which he denied that there had been any bargain, and the emphatic manner in which he said that any man who charged that there had been a bargain charged that which was false. He wanted the matter investigated and every Senator put upon oath. Mr. Butler replied that if he did not prove that there had been a bargain, he would resign. After some further colloquy on the same subject, and in the same vein, the Senate adjourned.

A DOWNFALL.

CLEVELAND, April 20.—Captain E. R. Clakeslee, the postal clerk, arrived at Toledo last night, was taken before United States Commissioner White this morning, and made a full confession of all his thieving operations. In answer to the commissioner's questions as to his motives in committing the robberies, the prisoner said: "I did not take the money for any greed or gain, but only to satisfy immediate wants. I received a small salary, and wanted to leave as much money as possible to my wife. The prime cause of my downfall can only be attributed to strong drink." He further explained that a large number of letters and postage stamps were at his home in Michigan, and two officers started in search the premises. They will return to-morrow, to which time the hearing was adjourned. Commissioner White fixed the bail at $5,000. Clakeslee replied: "I shall make no attempt to procure bail until I hear from my friends at home."

GENERAL JOE LANE.

SAN FRANCISCO, April 20.—A Portland dispatch says General Joseph Lane died at his home in Roseburg last night, aged 80.

PLEASANTLY SURPRISED.

ST. PAUL, Minn., April 20.—Farmers along the Hastings and Dakota Railroad have examined their wheat stacks that have been snow-covered all winter, and, to their delight, found the wheat in good condition and dry. If there had been any dampness it had been dried out by the pleasant dry weather and winds all winter. The farmers feared the wheat was lost, but are now rejoicing over its being saved.

ON REQUISITION.

MADISON, April 20.—Detective Janssen arrived here from Milwaukee to-night after a requisition of Governor of Illinois for a warrant for the arrest of a party in Chicago, who is held under a charge of embezzlement. The detective stated that the amount embezzled is a heavy one, but refused to give the name of the prisoner or any further particulars. Officer Janssen had a consultation over the matter with District Attorney Williams, who is here attending Supreme Court. This leads to the conclusion that the embezzlement was committed in Milwaukee.

THE GAZETTE.

THURSDAY APRIL 21, 1881.
TWO SCENES FROM AN UNPUBLISHED DRAMA.

It was in a garden shady,
Where the flowers softly lay,
That a lover and his lady
Met, and said farewell to say.

There were sighs and sobs in plenty,
Looks of hair and flowers, I ween, Tears, too, and youth was twenty,
And the maiden seventeen.

And his eyes were moist and shiny,
As he tried his love to tell,
While she, turned on the briny
Most successfully and well.

Then they bowed, in terms caloric,
Nothing should their true love sever,
And were really Plafinoric
In their frequent use of "Never."

Well, they met. When many seasons Neatly had the past interred, Doubtless both had had good reasons Why the meeting was deferred.

In a widow's cap, beguiling,
She was very strange a life,
While he came up, pleased and smiling,
With his pretty second wife.

Bows were made and hands were shaken,
Then old love was given up, Chirped he: "If I'm not mistaken, Wasn't I once quite devoted?"

"Was it you?" She gave another Smile. "I don't remember well.
It was you or else your brother,
Which, I really couldn't tell."
-Scrubber's Drib-A-Broc.

THE EMPTY CAGE.

"Sweet, s-w-e-e-t!" said the canary.
"O, you think so," responded the Doctor, who had come in and was seating himself at his study table. "Well, I am rather of that opinion myself; but keep still about it now, will you?"

Their conversation referred to the weather and all out-door generally, as seen from the open window. The long tresses of a weeping willow came waifed lightly across it with every breath of the fragrant June air. The emerald green lawn, the blossoming shrubs and roses, the humming of bees, the voices of children at play, the singing of birds, made a bewildering combination of gladness and beauty, at least for one little feathered throat to express. But if Dickie, the canary, he evidently meant to do the best he knew toward it. With low, long-drawn notes he commenced the performance, and was soon started in full career.

"Shut up!" called out the Doctor.
Rude words to throw at a dear little fluffy daffodil of a birdie! But Dickie knew how to understand them, accompanied as they were with such a merry glance. He didn't shut up while you could ten. On the contrary, he proceeded to sing louder than before. His pretty yellow body slightly swaying in his fervor, his nervous claws clapping the perch, his throat inflated, he poured trill upon trill, lark notes, nightingale notes, bell notes, a perfect shower and medley of notes without stint or pause —till suddenly there came a jerk and then a dead silence.

The Doctor laughed a little silently.
He had reached out his hand and twitched a piece of twine that hung down, fastened to one foot of the cage.
Evidently it had known service of this kind before. A few minutes' perfect silence followed. Dickie never did know what to make of that phenomenon. It was a new surprise to him every time, and always effectively silenced him for the time being. Now, heeded along his perch to the side of the cage, and craned his neck so as to bring one eye to bear downward upon the Doctor —sitting, innocently himself, his open book before him on the study table.

"Give it up," thought Dickie, considering him a moment; and he posed for a new burst. The low, long-drawn liquid notes recommenced. The Doctor started up. "Come, old fellow, he said, "there's something too much of this," and lowered the cage preparatory to conveying it away out of hearing.

"Yes, it's sweet, sweet," muttered the Doctor, and was proceeding, the cage in his hand, toward a closet door, when compunction seized him.

"Well, no, Dick," he said, "I won't be so hard on you a day like this.
Come, you shall go out into the midst of it, and split your throat if you like," and passing on to his mother's room, he hung the cage outside her window, and returned to his book.

He had studied without further interruption a long time, when there came a gentle knock at the door, and in obedience to his summons, little Jeannie Green entered—her modest face, with its golden curls and blue eyes smiling beneath her white cap-bonnet. At the Doctor's kindly greeting she came to him. "Please, sir," she said, "mother sent me to ask you what she can do for her finger. It's a sore and aches, and she's up to her shoulders in it. She's just walking the floor with it, and she says if it doesn't get better she's afraid she won't be able to do the work at the Infirmity you want her for to-morrow.
She hadn't a wink of sleep all night.
There isn't a silver nail anything in it, and she can't remember any way she's hurt it."

"Is that so?" said the doctor. "I'm afraid it may be a felon, Jeannie. Tell your mother to poultice it and use plenty of liniment. That's the best she can do, but I can't promise it will help the pain very much. I'll stop in and see when I go round, in an hour or two."

"Yes, sir, I'll tell her. Doctor, is that a canary singing out your side window?"
"Yes, Jeannie."

"Why! I thought it must be some other kind of a bird. They don't many of them here, do they?"

The Doctor smiled. "Well, no," he said. "I never saw one before that could make quite so much noise as he does."

"Noise!" thought Jeannie, wonder-ingly, as she softly left the study. "Well, I don't believe I should ever call that noise, not if I could hear him."

Dickie was pouring out more ecstasy when she returned past the side window. She couldn't resist stopping a moment at the fence to listen. Dinah, the Doctor's colored servant, was spreading out some pieces on the grass near by to bleach. "Only hear him!" said the child. "I don't know how such a little throat can hold all that singing!
Miss Day's canaries all four of them together ain't anything like it. That never came from around here, did it, Dinah?" she asked, gazing admiringly up at the cage.

Dinah followed the look. "The canary bird?" she said. "No. He was brung from York. It's the Doctor's little gal's. Her gran'ther gin it for her Christmas. I s'pose he thought she c'd take keer on 't. Massy! She's all high-tighty. She'd fergit her own head if twasn't fastened on 't. It was brought in ag'in, she did. The Doctor, he took 't 'way from her fin'lly, an' he's seen 't to hisself sense."

"Well, when our canary comes I guess he shan't want for anything," said Jeannie, her eyes shining. "We're going to have one."

"You be?"

"Yes. Miss Day raises 'em an' she's

NEVER MIND!

the mother was saying, in continuation of some talk they had had, "our ship'll be coming in one of these days and we'll have a canary in that cage yet."

"Sw-e-e-t!" piped a small voice in the direction of the window.

"What's that?" exclaimed Mrs.
Green. "There's some bird there—got in amongst them plants?" It was nearly dark. All was indistinct. They paused, wondering.

"Sw-e-e-t! We-e-e!"

"There is a bird there. Git a candle, children, quick."

And hardly had the light shone into the room when low, long-drawn, liquid notes preluded, and then came a full burst of melody.

"Mother Green," cried out Jeannie, excitedly, "that's him! that's the Doctor's canary! It's the very one I've been telling you about! It's in our cage—and the Doctor's put him there!"

Sure enough, so he had.—Mrs. E. C.
Gibson, in Christian Union.

THE AGE OF THE EARTH.

At the Midland Institute, Birmingham, England, the other day, Professor Ayrton delivered a lecture in which he gave some estimates of the earth's age.
In reply to the question of whether the earth's existence was to be counted by thousands or by millions of years, he called attention to the geological evidences of organic changes of the earth's surface which required not much less than a hundred million years for the earth's age. There was, however, a better method of approximating to the age of the earth. The changes of temperature belonging to the different seasons were less perceptibly felt as they penetrated the substance of the earth, until at a depth of about fifty feet the temperature was practically constant. If however, they continued to descend an increase of temperature was experienced at about the rate of one degree per fifty feet of the descent. Supposing this increase went on at the same rate until the center of the globe was reached, the temperature there would be 400,000 degrees higher than at the surface.
There was, however, no reason to assume that the increase did go on, or that the temperature at the center was higher than that of the molten rock, 7,000 degrees, or at most 10,000 degrees.
Assuming this to be the temperature at the center, and knowing, by experiment the conducting power of rock in relation to heat, Sir William Thompson was able to calculate the present distribution of temperature throughout the whole earth, not only the present distribution downward, but the distribution at any future and at any past time.
Taking the temperature of 7,000 degrees as having been once the uniform temperature of the whole body, the result of the calculations was that the earth had been a hundred million years in cooling.
